2. The Command of the Third Coastal Defense Zone (shortened to Third Zone O.O.) was formerly known as the Naval Command of the Southern Adriatic. Under its original name it was located at Tivat until the middle of 1948 when it moved to Meljine.
3. The Command is located in the former Gendarmerie Home which was badly damaged during the war but completely rebuilt and enlarged in 1946-1947. The wireless station is located on the top floor with its two aerials on the roof. Behind the main building there are several small buildings containing garages and fuel stores.
4. In October 1950 the commander of the Third Zone O.O. was Captain Vlado Prosic, and it is believed that he still holds this position.
5. The Signals Battalion of the Third Zone O.O. is located in the former barracks of the Artillery School. The unit probably belongs to the Marine Infantry since both officers and men wear army uniforms. The unit is composed of approximately 400 men and is equipped with several wireless transmitters, which are mainly of Russian origin, several field telephones and vehicles.
6. The engineering workshops of the Third Zone O.O. are located in a small building next to the barracks of the Marine Infantry at Kumbor. There is a staff of approximately 30, under Sergeant Vlado Labudovic, who carry out all types of engine repairs and overhauls.
